Kongo-sensei (金剛先生, Kong -sensei, Literally meaning "Adamant Teacher") is the head of the Gems, acting as the teacher, protector, and father figure. He teaches the Gems about the current world and its history and decides the role suited for each of them. He has overwhelming offensive power and can disperse the Lunarians in one blow. He becomes incredibly intimidating when angered.

99 percent evil conspiracy – from your sensei. You see, there ' s a whole bunch of stuff your sensei NEVER told you about Karate. And rightfully so. Because, if you were told these things when you started out, you would probably have slammed the dojo door shut and sprinted the heck away from that god-forgotten place faster than a speeding bullet.

Card-Jitsu Belts were clothing items which players received through their progress in Card-Jitsu. There were nine different belts to earn: White Yellow Orange Green Blue Red Purple Brown Black When players got a Black Belt, they had a chance of beating Sensei in Card-Jitsu. If they defeated Sensei, they would become a ninja. However, not many were ninjas as it took a long time to earn a Black ...

To go with turkey and trimmings, the top choice is Australian shiraz. It copes well with a varied plate (so long as you go easy on the cranberry sauce). If you prefer white wine, chablis makes a delicious pairing. For vegetarians, Quorn is more positively wine-friendly than soya-based protein, such as tofu and tempeh.

Although the time of the story is the present, the set design suggests the 1940s; Gary Wissner, the art director, goes for dark blacks and browns, deep shadows, lights of deep yellow, and a lot of dark wood furniture. It rains almost all the time. In this jungle of gloom, Somerset and Mills tread with growing alarm.
